A fairer picture who hath seen ?
Soft lights and shadows blent;
The central figure of the seene;
She site, my wife, my love, my quisen,
Her head a little bent;
And in her reyes of bine
I read my bliss anew.

I watch her as she pours the tea, With quiet centle grace; With flucurs deft and movement free I pledge her in my cup,

Was ever man before so blost?
I secretly reflect.
The passing thought she must have guessed.
For now door hip our mine are present,
An arm is around my neck;
Desc transure of my life,
God bloss her, little wife!

Insignificant as is the spot we ihabit, the zone of life, the area which not only all that live and breath and move inhabit, but in which all vegetation is contained, is still more limited. From the submarine forest in the lowest depths of the sea to the highest altitude to which the condor scars, above tality is confined. If the salamander lives in the central fire, the exception is pancakes because the air surrounds us on all sides, including our insides, and thereby the weight is balanced. To most of us, nature is one vast mirage, suggesting infinite delusions; and even to the learned many things still remain to be learned up by slow-moving science in future ages. Who would magine upon the face of the matter, one would conceive that we might hear a pin drop from the moon. Hawksby demonstrated the contrary of this fact in a memorable experiment before the royal society, 180 years ago. He placed the clock under the receiver of an air pump, in such a way that the striking of the elapper would continue after the sir had been exhausted; while the receiver was full of air the sound was quite audible; when it was empty all was silent. Again, when the air was introduced, there was a feeble sound, growing in intensity as the air grew denser. At the top of Mount Blane the report of a pistol is no louder than that of a common cracker let off at the level of the sea. "About two miles," says Mr. Glaisher, who, as everybody knows, is an aeronaut of considerable experience, "all noise ceases, I never encountered a silence more solitudes to which no terrestrial sound of from 1,000 to 1,500 feet, there is the noise of a train at 28,000, save M. Flammeron; but Mr. Glaisber testified to having heard this latter when 22,000 feet up in the air; the barking of a dog and the report of a gan rise each people, the crowing of a cock, the tolling of a bell to 5,000 feet, and the shout of a human being to 3,300 feet.
